

Tunxis Plantation Golf Course:

A wide variety of challenges in a scenic setting

205-yard 5th hole is one of Tunxis Plantation's most challenging. Your tee shot must carry a ravine to reach a narrow green surrounded by trees.

Meanwhile, the White course features water, and lots of it. At 6,638 yards and par-72, the White course plays somewhat more difficult than the Green and is especially testing from the back tees. The course features a few partial island greens requiring precision on approach shots.

The Red course is a full, regulation nine-hole layout that is perfect for golfers who just want to play nine on weekends. "It's a great nine," said head professional Lou Pandolfi, noting that some of the holes run close by the Farmington River.

Tunxis Plantation offers outstanding facilities and service for outings and charity tournaments of all sizes. The outdoor pavilion can accommodate 300 or more people, while the indoor banquet facility caters to smaller groups.

With two 18-hole championship layouts and a third nine-hole course – 45 holes in all – Tunxis Plantation is the grand daddy of Connecticut golf. No other golf course offers more choices or challenges.

But that's just one of the attractions about Tunxis. From the rolling hillsides to the meandering Farmington River, from the fertile farmlands to the quaint villages, Tunxis is nestled in the scenic Farmington Valley amid one of Connecticut's most desirable communities.

Designed originally by Al Zikorus, the first 18 holes were built in 1962 by the Tomasso family, with another nine holes added two years later. Tunxis Plantation grew to 36 in 1985 and then finally to 45 in 1995.

Each of the two 18-hole championship layouts at Tunxis offers its own special challenge. The Green course, a par-70, 6,446-yard layout from the back tees, has an open, links-style feel, but with narrow landing areas, numerous mounds and highly difficult par-3s. For example the
